Description: Power Gif Optimizer is a wizard-based application that allows you to reduce the size of your GIF images. The program includes four different modes, which can be selected to optimize a file by deleting its unnecessary elements or clearing the transparent areas. Each mode is further divided into different sections that allow you to delete the areas of the image that are not visible, remove similar spaces between frames, use another palette, merge similar frames, and change their order. After adding the files, you need to select a specific mode to apply the modifications. You have four options available, which include three modifying sections: Remove, Merge, and Change. The first removes those elements that are not visible; the second merges similar frames; and the third changes the order of the frames. You can select a file and start optimizing it in just a few seconds. Once the operation is completed, the new version is automatically loaded, and the result is displayed in the program's interface. In addition to the default mode, which is optimized for popular GIF files, you can also select GIF animations that support the new animation format. It means that the program will include the new frames in the optimized GIF file. Well, it seems that Google Chrome is officially embracing the latest HTML5 specification. The search engine has released a new extension, named Chrome Canary. It is supposed to be the latest beta version of the browser, so it can be used to view videos in HTML5. The extension is compatible with Google Chrome, Internet Explorer 10 and above, Safari and Opera for Mac. It even has a Windows version in the works. Chrome Canary has three main features. The first one is a separate video player, the second is a download manager, and the last is a timeline. The player is very simple, and it has only the option to play videos. It can display either links or a few frames at the time. Download manager is a Chrome for Mac and Windows only feature. The software can be used to queue up and download YouTube videos, or just download the videos as a whole and save them on a computer. The timeline is also a Mac and Windows-only feature. It can show videos in the browser and organize them into one big chunk. The video will play in the player, but if you select it, you can see a pop-up window with the video controls and a timeline. The new Chrome Canary comes in two flavors, one that supports H.264 and one that supports WebM. As for the latter, Chrome Canary can decode.webm and.ogg files without the need of any additional codec. Unfortunately, the timeline seems to be a shortcoming, as it does not support annotations. However, it will display a lot of data about the video, including
