The official facebook page for the excellent and extremely popular video game series known as “Mario Kart” has announced that Nintendo has purchased the licensing and distribution rights to the series, which is a pretty big deal for both Nintendo and fans of the series alike. The decision will enable Nintendo to retain all ongoing rights to the franchise in its current state, while Mario Kart players will be able to play in the most recent entry of the series. The sale also means that Nintendo will be able to bring in new creative contributors to the franchise going forward, a choice that a number of games companies have made in the past as well. “In addition to Mario Kart 8, Nintendo of America will handle all future Mario Kart titles, including DLC and post-release content, as well as, of course, advertising and marketing for Mario Kart 8,” the announcement explained. “This marks the first time in Mario Kart history that Nintendo of America has taken on a video game franchise, and we are honored to be able to bring fans of the Mario Kart series the latest and greatest games from Nintendo, as well as those brand-new experiences.” For those of you who don’t know, Mario Kart 8 is the latest entry in the Mario Kart series, and received generally positive reviews upon release. Fans of the series will undoubtedly be interested to hear that there will be new content in the future, though it is not clear what that might entail. “Mario Kart 8 is the first title in the franchise to offer fully 3-D racing for the Nintendo 3DS family of systems,” Nintendo went on to say. “Fans of this classic series will get a chance to play in the newest title, but they’ll also be able to play the entire Mario Kart franchise on a whole new level with all of their favorite characters and tracks.” Well, that’s it for today, folks, and if you enjoyed this story, or if you’ve got any thoughts, feel free to let us know in the comments below.
