Electrochemical hydrogen evolution on a variety of gold nanoparticles (AuNPs) has been studied as a function of gold coverage. A substantial enhancement in the hydrogen evolution reaction (HER) activity is observed with increasing Au coverage. Maximum catalytic activity is obtained on adsorbed AuNPs with coverage of 1.8+/-0.2 mol/g. Base-functionalized AuNPs exhibit a higher catalytic activity in comparison to bare and citrate-stabilized AuNPs, showing that the main factor influencing HER activity is the specific chemical binding of the metal. The data correlate very well with surface-enhanced Raman spectroscopy (SERS), indicating that this method provides a useful means for quantifying AuNPs coverages.-module(rabbit_bqueue).
